DOUBLE DATE WITH DEEP SEA

By MART BAILEY

HUGO WILBERT frowned when the doorbell rang. Like all true artists, he hated to be interrupted when in the throes of inspiration, and at the moment he was putting the last touches to the beard he was penciling on his wallet photo of Miss Tallulah O'Milligan.

"Will you see who's at the front door?" said Tallulah's lovely voice from upstairs. "Mother's busy fixing Pop's eye and apologizing for not knowing her fist was loaded."

Hugo shoved Tallulah's photo back into his wallet, with a last look to satisfy his suspicion that Tallulah did bear a strong family resemblance to her late great-great-grand-uncle, Corporal Timothy O'Milligan of the Virginia O'Milligans and the Confederate Army, whose daguerretypage was one of the horrors of the O'Milligan family album. The beard made all the difference, Hugo decided with a shudder.

The bell rang again, impatiently.

"Keep your shirt on!" Hugo muttered, and opened the door.

On the doorstep stood what Hugo first mistook for the battleship Washington. A second glance, however, revealed that it was a six-foot-five sailor with a chest like a gun turret and a face to match.

"Ring out the glad tidings," said the Navy, pushing Hugo aside and steaming into the living room. "Home is the sailor, home from the sea. Shout the happy news for which Tallulah's dear little heart palpitates: Deep Sea McGillicadhy is in port again!"

Hugo petulantly closed the front door. "I—I have a date—" he began to protest.

Deep Sea McGillicadhy considered this information irrelevant, but was willing to engage in a little chit-chat.

"That's nice." He regarded Hugo with benevolent if somewhat gorilla-like eyes. "I hope you have a good time. But isn't Veronica a little young to be going out with boys?"

Veronica was Tallulah's sister, aged ten.

Hugo's voice quavered off-key as he tried to clear up the misunderstanding. "My date is with Tallulah. She is upstairs powdering her nose. As soon as she comes down, she and I are going out." By way of explanation and emphasis, he added tremulously: "We have a date."

Deep Sea tut-tutted sympathetically. "Too bad you must break it. But cheer up—there are lots of other nice girls."

"I don't want to go out with lots of other nice girls. I want to go out with Tallulah."

Deep Sea cracked his knuckles. They gave off an ominous, rapid-fire sound that reminded Hugo of the newsreels he had seen of the United States fleet bombarding the coast of Japan.

"I will not be intimidated," Hugo said, but his voice lacked conviction.

Deep Sea, now out of cracked knuckles, was about to try something else, something pretty horrible having to do with knitted brows, bloodshot eyes, and throaty growls through bared fangs, when a lovely voice interrupted:

"Deep Sea! When did your ferry-boat get in? Why didn't you phone you were coming?"

Hugo recognized the voice, so cheerful and chummy, as that of his beloved, and he was annoyed. He turned with a scowl to see her descending the staircase.

Deep Sea met the radiant Tallulah halfway up the stairs, enfolded her in his boa-constrictor arms, and tenderly touched her lips with a kiss that went off as quietly as a nine-inch gun.

"It's a military secret. Don't tell anyone," Deep Sea told her in a whisper that had frequently been heard above a naval cannonading of the Japanese home islands. "The Washington dropped anchor in the Brooklyn Navy Yard only a couple of hours ago. I came as quickly as I could slip past the Shore Patrol."

Wounded to the depths of his sensitive soul, Hugo ascended the stairs and looked reproachfully at Tallulah. His eyes met hers under Deep Sea's elbow.

"I was telling Mister Deep Sea McGillicadhy that you and I are going out right away," he said.

"Oh . . ." Her big, glamorous green eyes clouded. "Hugo and I do have a date," Tallulah told Deep Sea; then turned hopefully to Hugo. "— Unless he wants to call it off."

Hugo was shocked.

"Yeah, Hugo, call it off," coaxed Deep Sea.

"No," Hugo said, stoutly. "A thousand times no."

Following him downstairs, Deep Sea curled a finger around Hugo's tie. "Maybe I could just sort of tag along, eh?"

Hugo tried to free his tie, but the finger held like a steel bear-trap. "We will all go out together," Deep Sea went on soothingly. "It'll be just like a double date."

The tie tightened like a hangman's noose.

"That would be swell," Hugo gulped, and the tie loosened. "It's too bad we can't do it." Hugo tried to inject a touch of regret into his voice.

"Why not?" Deep Sea demanded.

"Because Tallulah and I are going to the Miss It and Pay a Forfeit radio show, and I have only two tickets."

Hugo could not restrain a triumphant smile. But Deep Sea's next words wiped it off.

"Then it's all settled, pal!" Deep Sea roared, slapping Hugo on the back with a flounder-like hand that jolted loose fifteen vertebrae. "The USO gave me an Annie Oakley for that show. And I was wondering what to do with it when nobody would buy it!"

ALL DURING the subway ride to Radio City, Hugo

fumed. He disliked the loathsome way Deep Sea held Tallulah's hand, and he disliked still more the loathsome enjoyment that Tallulah seemed to take from Deep Sea's obnoxious attentions.

There was one bright hope, however. Anything could happen on the Miss It and Pay a Forfeit show; usually the results were comically gruesome. A faint smile lifted the corners of Hugo's mouth as he envisioned Deep Sea, having failed to answer the difference between a Communist and a Rhode Island Red, being obliged to dive from a fifty-foot ladder into a cauldron of boiling oil.

From this pleasant reverie Hugo was aroused by an enbow that nudged him as gently as a battering-ram.

"Hey, chum! That's you!"

Turning to Deep Sea, who was regarding him with the affability of a man-eating gorilla, Hugo realized with a shock that he was sitting in the radio theater, where the show was already in progress. By degrees he learned that upon entering the theater he had been given a ticket with a number; and that the Quiz Master, a thin, bald fellow in a white tuxedo, had just called out that number, which made Hugo one of the contestants, or, as the Quiz Master said with a toothy snicker, "one of the victims."

What Hugo never found out was that Deep Sea, on pretense of confirming the number, had switched tickets with him.

"You take the ticket," Hugo bleated. "I don't want to go up there!"

"Don't be a fuddy-duddy," said Tallulah, who sat on the opposite side of Deep Sea.

"Yeah, be a man," coaxed Deep Sea. "Go on up!"

The Quiz Master leaned across the footlights, shielding his eyes like a cigar store Indian. "Who's got number 497? Will number 497 please stand up, so the Red Devils, those happy trade marks of Devlin Soap, can escort lucky you to the stage?"

Hugo tried to shrink his trembling form into the red plush seat of his chair, and averted his eyes from the five fantastic figures in red who were walking up and down the aisles searching for number 497.

"Go on up," muttered Deep Sea, nudging Hugo bodily out of his seat.

"Shhhhhh!" Hugo pleaded. "Be quiet, and nobody will know it's me."

"HERE HE IS!" Deep Sea shouted. "HERE IS NUMBER 497!"

"WHAT'S GOING to happen to you," said the Quiz Master, flashing his sharp white teeth, "shouldn't happen even to Hirohito. You haven't a ghost of a chance."

The audience roared. Hugo stood trembling beside the microphone, his tortured eyes revolted by what they saw beyond the footlights. Deep Sea was convulsed with laughter; Hugo had expected that. What he hadn't expected was that sweet, lovely Tallulah would be so obviously filled with merriment at his misery.

"Answer this, and you'll receive a twenty-five-cent war stamp. Miss it and——" The Quiz Master's voice trailed off in an evil snicker. "Now listen very carefully, Mister Wilbert, because I cannot repeat the question. . . . What is the quotient of twenty-soup upsulah on the rillerrah?"

Hugo opened his mouth. Immediately cowbells rang and foghorns bellowed.

"YOU MISSED!" the Quiz Master roared above the gales of laughter, and grabbed Hugo's shoulder so he couldn't get away. "Now you've got to pay a forfeit!"

Dazed and bewildered, Hugo stared helplessly over the footlights. Deep Sea had his arm around Tallulah, and both were laughing in a manner most repulsive.

The Quiz Master clapped his hands. "Red Devils! Take off all this man's clothes!"

Hugo shrank within himself. The audience rolled in the aisles with glee.

"Behind that screen, of course," the Quiz Master added. "And dress him in the expensive costume of knightly raiment that you'll find there! Meanwhile, our announcer will tell us about the virtues of Devlin Soap, 'The Soap that Sinks.'"

ONE MINUTE LATER, Hugo again stood in the center of the stage, a glaring white spotlight pitilessly revealing his skinny frame draped in an oversized night-shirt.

The theater rocked with laughter. Hugo wondered what those fools found so funny. By now he had completely revised his opinion of the show, and if you had asked him what he thought of that rollicking half-hour on the air, Miss It and Pay a Forfeit, Hugo would have replied, "It stinks!" He was resolved, moreover, never again to wash his hands with the products of the Devlin Soap Company, which sponsored the program.

"You look beautiful!" exclaimed the Quiz Master.

The audience laughed long and loud. And Tallulah, it seemed to Hugo's pained ears, laughed longest and loudest of all, with Deep Sea running her a close second.

Hugo tried to move out of the circle of spotlight and promptly tripped on the hem of the nightshirt, which trailed along the floor. One of the Red Devils aided him to his feet with a touch of an electrically charged pitchfork. Sweet Tallulah nearly fell off her seat from laughing; Hugo wished she had.

"The question now, Mister Wilbert, is when is a nightshirt not a nightshirt?"

Hugo sagged weakly. He did not try to answer.

"When it's a shroud!" the Quiz Master wheezed. "I said you didn't have a ghost of a chance. But you are going to have a chance to be a ghost! Mister Wilbert, you're going to haunt a house!"

A Red Devil pinned a big round badge on the night-shirt. "That's your haunting license," the Quiz Master quipped.

Another Red Devil shaved ten years off Hugo's life by suddenly thrusting in front of him a monstrous grey skull with fiery red eyes.

The Quiz Master chuckled. "Don't be afraid! It's only a papier-mache mask with electric eyes. Later on you may meet the real thing!"

Then two Red Devils clamped the grotesque mask down over Hugo's head, nearly slicing off his ears, and ran him down the laughing aisles out of the crowded theater.

"You're a riot, kid!" Deep Sea yelled as Hugo galloped past. "Don't worry about Tallulah — I'll look after her!"

It's like a dream come true! Imagine having equipment similar to what thousands of Air Heroes and Flying Aces of today used in classrooms for their first flying lessons! Equipment designed by the men who headed our Air Forces! Equipment that helped solve the momentous task of training our pilots quickly and thoroughly. Yes, that's how Uncle Sam did it—with perfectly reproduced replicas of actual controls and instrument panels. Up to now these time-saving short-cuts to air mastery were unavailable to civilians, but at last this sensational offer opens the doors of the sky to you! Yes, by a special arrangement we are now able to offer you a complete course in pre-flight aviation training together with replica controls and instrument board similar to equipment used in official Air Force Training Schools. And we've put it up in game form so that you can enjoy yourself as you learn!

YOU OWE IT TO YOURSELF TO GET THIS COMBINATION OF INSTRUCTION AND ENTERTAINMENT! Look at the complete and realistic instrument board shown at the right! It's 16" high and 20" wide, and contains every instrument and dial essential to flying. It's not just a toy, but a true-to-life sturdy, durable replica of the real thing beautifully lithographed in full color. The dials on the panel are tachometer, air speed, turn and bank indicator, rate of climb, altimeter, clock, compass, fuel gauge, and oil temperature. The board also includes throttle, gas-line and ignition switches, and last but not least, a cross-hair bombsight and an automatic precision bomb release. The levers and needles are movable and can be set for any aerial maneuver. The control stick and wheel is 20" high and the rudder pedals work on a resilient spring-action principle.
